

VALUABLE ASHES IN FIRE COURT

Remains of Hawaiian Certificates and Gold Introduced as Evidence.

The charred fragments of $500 in Hawaiian Treasury certificates and a molten mass of precious metals were exhibits introduced during the session of the fire court yesterday.

Tin Chan, a manufacturing jeweler, who had his place of business on Maunakea street during the plague, put in a claim for $5,960, the greater part of which was for the destruction of money and precious metals, as well as jewelry.

There was just enough left of the certificates to ascertain their denomination. There was one one hundred dollar note, five fifties, four twenties, five tens and four fives. All of this money was in a safe valued at $195, which was also damaged by the fire.

There was also a claim of $819 for 2,100 pounds of refined Chinese earth and gold, and a claim of $13.75 for fifty bricks. Included in the claim were fifteen pair of bracelets, $39; forty-three hair pins, $8; and sundry other articles of jewelry which went to make up the total given above. Evidence was heard also as to the amount of loss occasioned by the heating of the gold, which was recovered, but which it is claimed the fire had deteriorated. There was before the fire tacks of gold, the total value of which was $167.
